A call to women to accept and live our feminine nature

The essence of the feminine nature is life. Growing from girlhood into womanhood, many of us forget or reject our true femininity. With knowledge and commitment, we can recover the sensitivities and intelligence natural to us as women. When rooted in the wisdom of our personal rhythms and inner knowings, we experience security and a sense of belonging from within. If you desire to Be Woman, the pages of this book invite you in.

Peggy Funk Voth is a clinical social worker and Jungian analyst in private practice. Her keen interest in the wholesome embodiment and expression of the masculine and feminine principles in everyday life informs her lectures, therapeutic work and gatherings of women. Peggy underwent 13 solitudes in accordance with the Seneca Healing Quest that she describes in this book. She grew up on a farm in Texas, married a Canadian, became a mother, a grandmother and a dual citizen, and now lives with her husband in Calgary, Alberta.

"This book is a gift for all women wanting to deepen their experience of the embodied feminine."

— Anita Johnston, PhD, author of Eating in the Light of the Moon

"I spent many years deeply living the question — What is the feminine? Asking inwardly for an answer. Through this period of longing, I was able to call the feminine aspect of myself home. People now ask me for the answer to this question, but I feel I have only been given a glimpse and no full explanation comes.

It seems though, to truly value the feminine in our culture we need to have an intellectual understanding for it gives us a way to relate to something ineffable or not yet seen. This book, The Nature of Woman, can help us, for in it, we have been given solid examples and expressions of feminine characteristics and ways in both nature and in human behaviour. One woman's insights, observations and experiences offer us deeper understanding and context for something that is universal and, in a way, invisible. It is no small feat to bring this forth."

— Megan McFeely, Producer/Director of the film "As She Is"
